Location of the Event: N/A

Description: I was alone putting away some books, when I heard whispering. At first, I thought it was someone else, but there was no one else around. I turned off my music to listen better, and that's when I heard this low, guttural voice saying my name, over and over. That's when I caught a glimpse of a figure at the far end of the stacks. I said hello to it, thinking it might be another student, but it just stood there hunched, staring at me. I ran, and I'm never going back.

Late one evening, as Emma was studying in the old university library, she noticed she was the only one left. The air felt unusually cold, and the dim light cast eerie shadows on the walls. Determined to finish her work, she ignored the unsettling silence. As she flipped through her notes, a faint whisper brushed past her ear. Startled, she looked around. No one was there. She shook it off as her imagination and returned to her work. But then, the whisper came again, clearer this time: "Why are you here?" Emma's heart pounded. She grabbed her bag, ready to leave. Just as she stood up, all the books on the nearest shelf fell to the ground with a deafening crash. Paralyzed with fear, she turned to see the faint outline of a figure standing in the shadows. Its hollow eyes seemed to stare right through her. The figure moved closer and whispered again, "You shouldn't have stayed..." Emma bolted out of the library.

Phantom of Dorm 13

Late one stormy night, the lights flickered in the old college building on campus, a relic of the 1800s with its creaking floors and dusty chandeliers. Whispers echoed through the empty halls, though no one was there. Students often joked about the "Phantom of Dorm 13," a ghostly figure rumored to roam the third floor. But when Emma, a curious freshman, ventured inside to investigate, she discovered something chilling. In the library's forbidden archives, she found her own photo in a century-old class portrait—her name scrawled beneath it, along with the chilling words: "She'll return to us."
